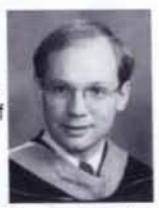
BJU Review

Summer 2000

From The Refrigerator Door

Dr. Rhonda Galloway, English professor, and Dr. Joe Sutton, special education professor, co-authored an article which was published in the Summer 1999 issue of Private School Monitor, titled "Are Adults Who Were Home Educated Experiencing Success in Their Adulthood?" A manuscript of their research project, "College Success of Students from Three High School Settings," funded in part by the National Center for Home Education, will appear in the Spring 2000 issue of the Journal of Research and Development in Education. Rhonda has also released an audiotape titled "Home School Tip of the Week."

Amy Crane, '00 M.A. Special Education grad, released her first book in May 2000. Rejoice in the Light: A Woman's Journey out of the Mystery of Epilepsy, is available through Agape Publishing, Greenville, SC.



Michael Moore, '00 M.Ed. grad, presented findings from a research project titled "The Current Status of Christian Day School Beginning Band Programs in the United States: Funding, Scheduling, and Instructional Materials" at the annual convention of the SC Music Educators Association in February.

Josh Crockett, senior rhetoric/public address major, and Samuel Bray, sophomore prelaw major, took first place in the Senior Division at the Anderson University intercollegiate debate tournament and also the Miriam Bonner NEDA Debate Tournament held at BJU this past February.

In the spring BJU Review, we inadvertently omitted the names of the donors of the Last Supper mosaic which hangs on the side of the new Fine Arts Center. We would not have this masterpiece were it not for the kind generosity of the Kenneth A. Curtis family, which includes Mrs. Kenneth Curtis, Mr. & Mrs. David Sperr (David is an '83 grad, and Connie is an '82 Academy grad), Rev. & Mrs. Eastman Curtis, and Mr. & Mrs. Scott Chapman. Along with his father, Mr. Kenneth Curtis designed Masterpiece Gardens, where the mosaic was originally displayed.

Jonathan Moyer, '98 piano grad, was given a Development Grant by Peabody Conservatory for attendance at several European Festivals this summer. He will also play several concerts in Europe sponsored by La Gesse Foundation.

Matt O'Dell, junior piano performance major, won first place in the college division of the Eleventh Annual Greensboro Music Academy Piano Competition in Greensboro, NC, this past February.

TO ALL

Bob Jones Jr. Memorial Seminary and Evangelism Center—

a training ground for pastors and future missionaries all over the world.

On March 23, the Bob Jones Jr. Memorial Seminary and Evangelism Center was dedicated, giving a new home for BJU's seminary program.

"We want to have a physical presence that makes a clear statement that we are committed to the highest level of ministerial training that we can possibly offer," says Dr. Steve Hankins, dean of the seminary. "But most important, the physical facility is intended to be a platform for training for world evangelization. We want to help local churches and mission agencies and be a place where people can come and hear seminars on topics of interest to Christian ministry."

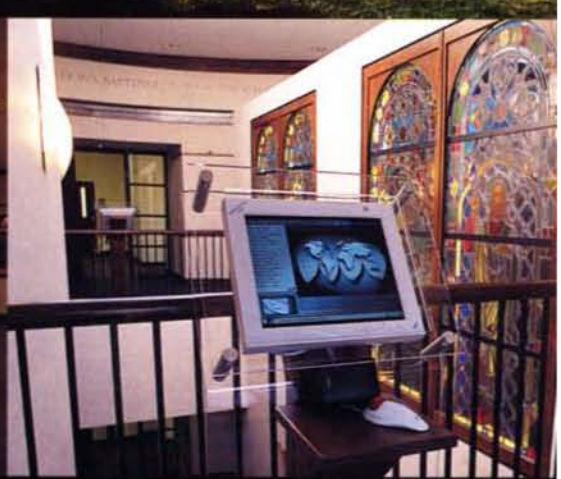
Not only is the building beneficial to local churches, but it is also a wonderful facility for the men who come here to get their degree. "The Seminary building is built immediately adjacent to the library, which is a major facility for research, particularly for graduate students," Dr. Hankins says. "There are also special study areas for doctoral and master's students that give them a place to locate during the day—a study 'home away from home.'"

Dr. Bob Jones Jr.—the Dedicatee

Dr. Bob Jones Jr.'s zeal for Christ, evangelistic fervor and love for missions made him a natural choice as the building's dedicatee. He has given so much to the ministry at BJU, as well as to mission fields all over the world.

"Dad and I had often talked about our desire to see the seminary have its own identifiable presence on campus," says Dr. Bob Jones III. "When the time of Dad's departure to Heaven was near at hand, graduates began expressing their desire to have a suitable memorial for him. There was no question in my mind that it had to be a seminary building. I was able to tell him of it a few days before he died. He smiled and received the news with gratitude and thanksgiving for the goodness of God that would make it possible."

MORIAL SEMINARY AND



"Years ago I heard Dr. Jones Jr. say that he had an ambition when he was young to be a medical missionary," says Dr. Thurman Wisdom of the Bible faculty and until this month, dean of the School of Religion. "The Lord didn't allow that, but always throughout his life he had a burden for missions."

"When Dr. Bob retired as president, he stated his purpose for that part of his life was to travel to mission fields and encourage missionaries," says Dr. Robert Bell, coordinator of Curriculum and Faculty Development at the seminary.

And that's exactly what he did—in 1997 alone, he traveled over 40,000 miles by plane. "In the closing years of his life, it seemed that he was gone more than he was here," Dr. Hankins says. "A major part of his legacy was this missionary focus."

Seminary Dean

"Seminary training is a vital part of training for the ministry, and that training requires an overseer," Dr. Wisdom says.

Dr. Hankins has been given the monumental task of first dean of the seminary, but he has been well prepared for this challenge. He has served as a Bible professor at BJU for nearly 25 years and has taught a variety of courses on both the university and seminary levels. He has also held positions as youth pastor, associate pastor, and senior pastor in fundamental churches in North and South Carolina. Not only is he involved in domestic ministerial training, but he also ministers on foreign fields and serves as the Vice President of Eastern European Ministries, an American support agency for Christian ministries in Central and Eastern Europe, Russia, and the former Soviet republics.

"Circuit-riding" Preacher

Did you know Dr. Bob Jr. preached in the 28 countries listed below between 1951 and 1997, not to mention the District of Columbia and nearly 45 states?

Financial Blessings

"This building project was different from others we've done on campus because we didn't make a general appeal to all graduates," says Stephen Jones, administrative assistant. "Dr. David Innes, pastor of Hamilton Square Baptist Church in San Francisco, and a number of graduates decided before Grandpa's death to raise money for a seminary building. The best idea was to contact former preacher boys and graduates and ask them if they would personally take on the project or get their churches involved."

"The idea was that these churches were grateful for the training that their pastors had received at BJU and would want to give back to the ministry," Dr. Bell says.

"The goal was to get 500 churches involved, and we received almost $500,000 in pledges and gifts," Mr. Jones says. "For a while it was daunting, but then all of a sudden the Lord opened the flood gates and we received several large donations. The Lord has definitely brought this project to completion."

Stephen Jones

The Rotunda

The building was designed with a rotunda, separated from the main building and designed to be a gallery of memorabilia and multimedia computer presentations.

"There really is a two-fold purpose for the whole memorabilia and history focus," Dr. Hankins says. "There is obviously a II Timothy 2 focus: 'commit now to faithful men the things which thou hast learned.' Here are these men who have given their lives to prepare men for the ministry, and this is intended to be a reminder of that. But there is also the focus on world evangelization. Dr. Bob Jones Jr.'s focus in ministry was very much toward world evangelism."

"I was recruited by Bruce McAllister to do the research for the displays in the rotunda," says Dr. Mark Sidwell, church historian and director of the Mack Library Fundamentalism File. "I outlined ideas, took suggestions, and put together a proposal of what we should do in the rotunda. I then selected photos and video clips for the computer station dedicated to Dr. Bob Jr. We got recordings of Dr. Bob Jr. reading his own poetry and video clips from films such as Flame in the Wind and from his preaching. Mr. Steven Lee, a '95 computer science grad, developed all the multimedia computer presentations stationed throughout the rotunda.

"We also have a section dedicated to the men who directed the ministerial classes: Dr. Stenholm, Dr. Parker, and Dr. Rupp. For that room we put together a visual display of pictures of the ministerial class through the years, and another computer display with the history of evangelism—Bob Jones University's role in evangelism, Dr. Bob Jr.'s role, and a description of the directors' work with the ministerial class.

"On the second floor there is a mural painted by Jim Brooks of the art faculty. To complement the mural, I wrote descriptions of the various people who are represented in that piece," Dr. Sidwell says. "Those descriptions go on the wall around the mural. There are also two other computer stations on the second floor. One is on missions and evangelism with video clips of some of our grads talking about the evangelism needs where they are. There is also a section where someone can pull up information on any country in the world—population, flag, predominant religion, and the national anthem also plays. The other computer station provides information about the Seminary itself and the Seminary faculty.

"The rotunda will be open on Saturdays and Sundays, so people can come in and learn more about the school and about Dr. Bob Jones Jr.," Dr. Sidwell says.

Long-Term Goals

"Training preachers is what BJU does best and loves most," Dr. Jones III says. "The seminary faculty are committed to training warmhearted, evangelistic preachers at the highest level to take Christ's Gospel to the ends of the earth."

"We want this seminary to be a nerve center for the fulfilling of the Great Commission," Dr. Hankins says. "That's what our training at BJU has always been about, but now there's a physical presence

The History of American Evangelism Mural

"This is the largest painting by far that I have ever attempted to paint. It's approximately 7 feet tall by 20 feet wide, done in acrylic paint," says Mr. Jim Brooks, illustration teacher, wildlife artist, BJU Review art director and creator of the seminary's new mural. The sheer magnitude of the size forced him to rethink and relearn painting, even though he was working in his favorite medium.

Mr. Brooks was asked by Dr. Bob III to create this mural with the theme of "The History of American Evangelism." With help from Dr. Mark Sidwell and Dr. David Beale, the personalities were chosen and the project was begun.

"There are seventeen evangelists beginning with Roger Williams and ending with Dr. Bob Sr.," Mr. Brooks says. "There are also three noted hymn writers from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Because of the heavy use of portraits, I tried to design in such a way that the portraits wind around three scenes that are typical of the time periods in which the men were active."

Although he hasn't kept an accurate time record, Mr. Brooks has no doubt spent several hundred hours researching, sketching, designing, and painting this mammoth project. The actual painting began in early November and was finished at the beginning of March.

where we're giving real emphasis to this. There are needs all over the world. Through prayer and biblical counsel we want to impart to men a real burden for these places and see God place a burden on them to go.

"The 'big picture goal' is to have a seminary graduate two-member team as a missionary/church planter and a pastoral trainer in every one of the 192 nations of the world," Dr. Hankins says. "That's a long-term prayer goal. We are praying the Lord of the harvest to accomplish that goal. We also want to see one of our seminary grads as a church planter in every one of the largest population centers in the U.S.

"The available technology today allows us to maintain a wonderful support ministry for these men when they do go out," Dr. Hankins says. Professors will be able to take advantage of video and audio conferencing to get guest lecturers from all over the world. Missionaries who can't leave their posts will be able to speak to students who may eventually take their place on the field.

"We're training the personnel and providing the materials and a support structure for world missions," Dr. Hankins says.

"In the relatively near future we want to broadcast live lectures from the seminary building to BJ LINC sites around the country, and possibly direct to the PC once the technology is in place," says Dr. Bruce McAllister, director of extension ministries.

"Realistically our goals are not outlandish. This is not about human goals; it's about fleshing out in reality some expression of the Great Commission—take the truth and preach the gospel to all nations," Dr. Hankins says.

Jay Bopp, Lewis Carl and the Art Agency for the execution of the rotunda memorabilia and static displays.

In Remembrance and Honor

Mr. Emery Bopp of the art faculty was asked to sculpt the bust of Dr. Bob Jones Jr. for prominent display in the center hall of the Rotunda.

"I made a metal and wood structure to build the bust around," Mr. Bopp says. Then working from yearbook photos of Dr. Jones Jr., Mr. Bopp was able to sculpt the bust with a material called plastalene—differing from clay in that it doesn't ever harden fully. "After the sculpture is done, the material for the mold is poured over it," Mr. Bopp says. "The mold sets, and is then cut in parts to remove the original plastalene sculpture. When the mold is put back together, the material for the actual bust is poured in and sets." Dr. Bob Jr.'s bust was done in a solid cast stone material, but may be done in bronze eventually.

Mr. Kenn Brinson of the art faculty sculpted the busts of Drs. Parker, Stenholm, and Rupp.

- A 20' x 7' full-wall mural tracing the history of American evangelism.

The President's Corner

The trustworthy Christian college is good soil for good seed to grow in—a healthy place for the growth of healthy Christian souls. Bob Jones University, by God's grace, is such a place.

Parents who leave their freshmen here know that what sprouts from the seed of their children's lives has everything to do with what is in the seed. If the seed is that of a weed, only a weed will grow from the good soil.

Nevertheless, good soil is a far better place than bad soil for a good seed to grow.

Parents who deposit their children in the soil of Christian colleges gone bad, or in secular colleges, have reason to tremble and worry. A columnist for a Colorado newspaper puts it this way:

"Wander Colorado's crowded college campuses this week and you'll see [SUVs] everywhere. Next to nose rings, the $35,000 vehicle is the trendiest student accessory since the backpack.

For anybody who went to college before 1975, campus life circa 1999 comes as a bit of a shock.

Parents will notice it immediately. Their kids, meanwhile, will consider their parent's reaction just one more indication that the world must have been a dark and geeky place before digital-fiber-optic-four-wheel-drive enlightenment.

The first clue about the changes comes during orientation. . . .

The sessions bear titles like: "Welcome to Campus," "Sex and the College Student," "Financial Aid," "What is Date Rape?" "Your New Home, the Residence Hall," "Avoiding Sexually Transmitted Diseases," "Alcohol Poisoning and You," "Campus Safety: How to Disarm Your Attacker" . . .

And in case you're still not feeling nauseated and alienated by this bizarre world that you used to think you understood so well, parents will be reminded once again of their limited usefulness in this whole process. . . .

They will be told that the law prohibits the school from releasing any information on students' academic performance, courses dropped, disciplinary actions or medical records. Starting this year, however, parents will be notified if the student is caught two or more times using illegal drugs or alcohol on campus. . . ."

It is satisfying, humbling, and a huge responsibility for the faculty and staff at BJU to be entrusted by parents with the nurture and training of the character, hearts, and minds of their children.

As long as a literal Devil is running loose in the world, no place is free from his intrusion, and there is no guarantee that any of us will not be corrupted by this enemy of our souls.

Parents who leave their children at BJU can nevertheless be guaranteed that everything humanly possible will be done to keep the soil here spiritually rich and weeded. —Bob Jones III

The School of BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

The School of Business at BJU prepares each student for the demands of the business profession through up-to-date classroom instruction, state-of-the-art technology, a wide-ranging liberal arts emphasis, and a variety of leadership opportunities. The professors draw from years of business and teaching experience to provide classroom instruction that is both academically sound and practically useful.

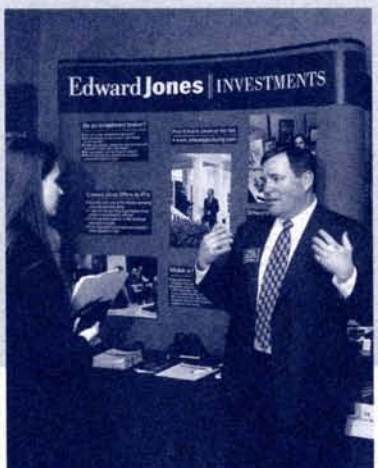
The School of Business includes four business labs equipped with over ninety computers, each loaded with applications such as Power Point, Excel, and other business tools. Computer applications classes train students to use these applications, and many of the business classes integrate the use of technology throughout the curriculum.

While much of the instruction is business-related, the entire context of the education here at BJU is based on a liberal arts curriculum. While today's emphasis leans toward specialization, we believe that the effective business executive will have an understanding of many fields outside of the world of business. Of course, all instruction focuses on Christ and the claims He places on the lives of His servants.

The leadership opportunities at BJU are great experiences for business students. The University Business Association, societies, extension, and the Community Relations Council all offer opportunities to build leadership skills and provide a wonderful training ground for students preparing to become leaders for Christ in the business field.

UBA: University Business Association

The UBA is the student service organization for the School of Business. The UBA sponsors field trips to local businesses, the Federal Reserve Bank, Wall Street, and other exciting locations. The officers of the UBA plan several forums throughout the academic year with successful business executives who address various issues that the students will face after graduation. The UBA also provides a great opportunity for business students to develop leadership and interpersonal skills.



Bob Jones University is divided into six academic schools—Education, Applied Studies, Religion, Business, Fine Arts, and Arts and Science. Twice a year we'll do an "in-depth" insert about one of these divisions. This third insert covers the School of Business Administration.

Internships

During their junior and senior years, many of the students in the School of Business participate in internships with accounting firms, corporations, and non-profit organizations which have offices near BJU. Part-time internships are scheduled with the students' regular course load; full-time internships take place for approximately seven weeks of the students' junior year. These internships provide hands-on experience and an intimate exposure to the business field. They often lead to full-time employment positions after graduation as well. The internship experience is a vital link between classroom instruction and the demands of the ministry of business.

Associate to Bachelor Programs

The School of Business and the School of Applied Studies have developed a unique and exciting partnership combining the academic training provided by the School of Business and the hands-on training that characterizes the School of Applied Studies. The combination of these two resources has provided three blended majors.

Aircraft Maintenance—Missionary Aviation and Aviation Management

The aviation management and missionary aviation programs build upon the aircraft maintenance and flight training programs. These programs prepare the student to be successful in the ever-expanding aviation business either in full-time Christian service or as a layman working for the airline industry.

Culinary Arts—Restaurant Management

The culinary arts associate degree provides technical and hands-on instruction in food production and operations. The bachelor of science degree in restaurant management integrates with the culinary arts program and finishes the student's education with a perspective of today's business community. These programs prepare students to be successful Christians in the restaurant/hospitality industries.

Horiculture/Landscape Technology—Horticulture Management

The horticulture/landscape technology associate degree provides technical instructions and hands-on training in all aspects of ornamental horticulture and landscaping. The bachelor of science degree in horticulture integrates with the horticulture/landscape technology program and finishes the student's education with a perspective of today's business community. These programs prepare students to be successful Christians in nursery and greenhouse management, and the ornamental horticulture business.

Graduate Testimonies

Marshall Franklin—'87 grad, Accounting—Partner, Ernst & Young in Birmingham, AL

Praise the Lord for the spiritual foundation I received and the business acumen I developed at BJU. My preparation for the business world was first class, teaching me to be a creative thinker, disciplined, punctual, and honest. BJU prepared me to make a life for Christ, not just a living.

Sharon Keck—'89 grad, Accounting—Controller, Air Methods Corporation in Lakewood, CO

The accounting education I received has proved to be second to none as I have used my base of knowledge to understand and apply accounting concepts to specialized industry issues. Both as auditor and as controller, my responsibilities have included as much interaction with people as with books and numbers. The emphasis placed on speech and writing skills for a School of Business graduate has been invaluable in enabling me to communicate clearly. My biblical training has helped provide the vital plumb line against which to measure ethical questions I have faced in my career.

Jodi Beck—'92 grad, Office Administration—Inventory Logistics Manager for Greenville/Asheville, IKON Office Solutions in Duncan, SC

Since graduation, I have held challenging administrative positions where I supported teams of sales representatives, their managers, presidents and VPs. Because of the quality and depth of my classes and professors, I never second-guessed my education or qualifications. The solid computer-based foundation I gained at BJU allows me to continue to learn new software packages, teach foundational techniques to others, and advance at a much faster pace than those with less of a computer-based education.

Jim Ressler (father) and Vivian Ressler (daughter)—'70 grad, Accounting—Owner, Ressler's Propane in Manheim, PA and '98 grad, Professional Accounting— Staff Accountant, Deloitte & Touche, LLP in Greenville, SC

We received an excellent business education in the School of Business which has prepared us well for our current business careers. But more importantly, we had the opportunity to observe true Christianity lived in the lives of the business faculty. Although much has changed from the 1970s to today, the academic excellence and spiritual emphasis of the School of Business have remained consistent.

Tim Stanley—'80 grad, Business Management—Senior Vice President, Northwest Financial, Inc. in Ankeny, IA

"Give a man a fish and you feed him for a day; teach a man to fish and you feed him for a lifetime." Looking back over the last 20 years, my wife Darcy and I are thankful we learned our "fishing skills" at BJU. As a senior vice president, a director of a small manufacturing company, a deacon, and a music director, I value my education from BJU's School of Business, with its biblically based approach and standards of excellence. Our children have reaped extended benefits from our BJU experience and are looking forward to being second generation BJU "fishermen" in a few years.

The Future MBA Program

Decision-making skills, financial analysis, operations management and business strategy—sounds like your typical MBA program, right? How about adding something out of the ordinary—a top-notch, Christ-centered program with emphasis in emerging business development, featuring both classroom and distance-education formats?

The new MBA program at BJU will begin the summer of 2001 under the direction of Dr. Dick Stratton and Mr. Mike Buiter. Dr. Stratton currently serves as dean of the School of Business and Mr. Buiter has served in significant financial and operating roles in both Fortune 500 and small-company environments. In addition to standard MBA courses, this unique program will provide training in entrepreneurial development, negotiations, e-commerce and other vital areas of executive development. The course content will be made available through local classroom instruction and distance education technology nationwide. Call 1-800-BJ-AND-ME or visit our website at www.bju.edu for more information.

Kim Tollefson Williams—'93 grad, Office Administration—homemaker, previously administrative assistant to the CEO, Simmons & Company International in Houston, TX

After graduating from BJU with a major in office administration, I was offered the job for which I felt I was trained—administrative assistant to the CEO of an international investment banking firm. I can honestly say that I have never once questioned whether or not I had adequate training in my field. I am convinced that the more important facet of my education is the work ethic, discipline and character instilled in me as a student at BJU. It is those characteristics that capture attention and survive long past the tenure of any job. As a physician's wife and stay-at-home mom, I routinely aid my husband in his various presentations, research projects and publications, as well as handle our family's household finances.

Jim Wiginton—'81 grad, Business Management—Director of Finance, US Automotive Operations, Plastic Omnium in Greenville, SC

The School of Business is a wonderful place to train for a career in business. Not only is the technical training excellent, but more importantly, I was encouraged to hone my skills in the areas of getting along with people, speaking, and written communication. Of course, the most important training I received was in developing my relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Present Student Testimonies (1999-2000 School Year)

Josh Carper—Senior, Professional Accounting

Through my years in BJU's School of Business, I have been impressed with one idea more than any other: the attitude with which the teachers approach their work. The teachers in the School of Business make it evident to anyone in their classrooms that they each view their position as much more than that of teacher.

Pamela Duckworth—Senior, Office Administration

My years at BJU have been the most beneficial in my spiritual life. The faculty of the School of Business have made a godly impact upon my life. While they teach the basic skills and concepts needed to succeed in the business world, they also instill the principles for making godly choices and having a humble attitude in any future job situation.

Bridget Grandmaison—Senior, Marketing Management

In a past project, my group analyzed Land Rover and made an oral presentation at the showroom in Greenville. Following the presentation, the manager asked why a "sharp group of young people" like us would want to attend a school like BJU. The answer was simple—the quality of the business faculty and the quality of education we receive far surpasses any benefit that might come from attending a more "recognized" school.

Jeremy Hickey—Junior, International Business

The School of Business is preparing me to be a witness for Christ in the business world. The professors really seem to have a gift for seeing our raw talent and developing it into exactly what we need to succeed. One of my teachers found the exact internship opportunity I needed at the U.S. Department of Commerce. I am gaining the experience and knowledge I need to be competitive because of my training at BJU.

Katie Tuttle—Senior, Professional Accounting

When I arrived at BJU four years ago, I had no idea what God's will was for my life. Providentially, I ended up in a Principles of Accounting class, which was my introduction to the School of Business. My business classes have impacted me in many ways, but nothing has been as important to me as the testimony and focus of my teachers. They've taught me not only the essentials of accounting, but, more importantly, the fundamentals of engaging in the Lord's ministry within the business community.

The New International Business Major

The new international business major, which was implemented in the fall of 1999, has already generated significant interest among the students. With the globalization of the marketplace and the challenging new opportunities around the world, students face an exciting future in worldwide study. With an eye toward the horizon, BJ students majoring in international business will be equipped with language skills and cultural awareness that will prepare them for their personal and business futures. BJU international business students will be well prepared to adapt to the methods of conducting business at home and abroad.

Boy, was I wrong.

It was 6:30 p.m. on Feb. 9, and I was flipping between the major networks, searching for a story about George W. Bush speaking on the BJU campus that day. As I recall, I couldn't find anything other than a brief reference by Dan Rather. I turned off the news, thinking that everyone had missed it, again.

Boy, was I wrong.

What erupted, fed by the media and the mud-slinging of a close primary, was a vitriolic attack on Bob Jones University in specific and religious freedom in general. Literally millions of words have been written or spoken about BJU, all stemming from Gov. Bush's appearance.

the background The initial outcry was that Gov. Bush should not have spoken at such a "bigoted" institution (more on those charges later). But he was the first political leader of the more than 20 who have visited here to be so criticized (see sidebar). Why now?

Why him? And why just our beliefs? Al Gore wasn't attacked when he spoke to a group of Orthodox Jewish believers who, because of religious practices, separated men and women. And the media made no noise when a campus representative for a Baptist mission board received a letter threatening charges of criminal trespass for his activities on the University of Notre Dame campus last September.

And since when are political candidates responsible for the views of those to whom they speak? Frankly, we were dumbfounded.

the charges We were accused of being racist because of our long-standing (and since lifted) ban on interracial dating. We were prepared for those charges; we had heard them for 25 years.

But what we weren't ready for was the "religious bigotry" charge directed toward our position on Roman Catholicism. It should come as no surprise to anyone that the biblical (and long-standing Protestant) position would be to speak out against any method of salvation other than through faith in the shed blood of our Savior Jesus Christ. We don't hate the Catholic, as evidenced by the support we received from Catholic elected officials in the state; we are simply opposed to Roman Catholicism.

Nevertheless, the media and the politicians chose to attack us for our religious beliefs. That should be frightening to people of all faiths throughout this country.

To defend Bible truth vigorously is expected; it is traitorous to Christ for Bible believers to do otherwise. What the media have excoriated us for doing is what God's people have done throughout church history.

When Sen. Joseph Torricelli (D-NJ) and his long list of co-sponsors (see sidebar) introduced a resolution condemning BJU into the U.S. Senate, and Sen. Ernest Hollings (D-SC) called BJU a "national embarrassment" and stated he would support such a resolution, it was a dark day for religious freedom in America. As BJU grad and S.C. House Speaker pro tempore Terry Haskins stated, "When the legislative branch resorts to condemnations of religious beliefs, the Constitutionally guaranteed right of religious freedom is in a precarious position."

the barrage The University, since that day in February, has been inundated by the media, school supporters, and the curious. The community relations office handled hundreds of requests for interviews and thousands of e-mails. The few interviews that they did grant resulted usually in one-sided stories; some stories were edited to splice together phrases to vilify us.

And graduates felt the impact, too. It was for them and for the cause of Christ that Dr. Bob III decided to appear on Larry King Live, Friday evening, March 3. Dr. Bob was ill most of the week before, which, he said, gave him time to pray and think. And he realized that BJU's adherence to an interracial dating rule that was rarely discussed from the pulpit was doing the cause of Christ more harm than good.

He surprised nearly everyone when he announced live on CNN, "We don't have to have that rule. In fact, as of today, we have dropped the rule. I don't want to hurt the church of Jesus Christ," Dr. Bob said to Larry King. "Our concern for the school's broader usefulness is greater to us than a rule we never talk about."

And through that statement, the Lord opened up a huge opportunity for witness; repeatedly, throughout the rest of the interview watched by millions, Dr. Bob repeated the Gospel to Larry King and to the world.

And yet, the attacks continued on our "anti-Catholic" position; it became a centerpiece of the Republican primary in several states.

But a few media outlets seemed to understand. The Chicago Tribune recognized that BJU "has been roundly excoriated for its attacks on Catholic teaching and the pope, but isn't the right to hold such views what religious tolerance is all about?...When the Congress of the United States seeks to condemn the beliefs and practices of any religious denomination, the First Amendment is in danger."

And the local Greenville paper, aware more than any other media outlet of the true heart of the people of BJU, called "the effort in Congress... shocking and frightening." Another editorial, while recounting charitable comments about BJU from Methodists, Episcopalians, and Jews, stated, "It is difficult to categorically condemn an institution that follows through, so faithfully, on its Matthew 25 responsibility to care for 'the least of these.'"

Slowly, people across the country began to recognize the hypocrisy of the media coverage: those pronouncing BJU intolerant were in and of themselves intolerant.

Things seem to have calmed down for now, with the Republican primary all but wrapped up and the "Catholic-hating" phone bank calls that pounded the nation subsided for the time being.

But the opportunities that BJU has had to present the Gospel to the country and the world have been immeasurable. To buy commercial time equal to the amount of media coverage we have received would cost hundreds of millions of dollars. More people than ever are curious about this 5,000-student university in South Carolina that interweaves high academics, nearly 120 majors, and a strong, scriptural, character-building stand.

But this will not be the end. Whether this fall during the presidential race, or two years from now on some other aspect of religious freedom, we will be attacked again.

the impact

The Torricelli bill is frightening. It is tyranny when the government attacks beliefs with which it differs. On what beliefs will those attacks fall tomorrow? Or next year? What will this mean for the beliefs you and your church hold?

The early church knew tribulation much worse than anything we have experienced in these past few months. But will this attack on religious freedom propel American Christians into such a period of persecution?

For example, will a future governmental insistence on hiring quotas for homosexuals mean that your church will have to choose between violating its biblical beliefs or losing its tax-exempt status? Such a scenario is not far off, and the current climate is only another step in that direction.

Are we sorry that George W. Bush came to speak here? I'm not sure I can answer that. But I know that we at BJU are not sorry for the beating we have taken. In fact, we should have seen it coming. "Beloved, think it not strange when these fiery trials come upon you as though some strange thing has happened unto you, but rejoice" I Peter 4:12–13.

Boy, was I wrong.

Life in these parts

So you want to find out about BJU, but you aren't quite ready to hop on a plane and make a visit? Here's a humorous overview of a few features of "life in these parts."

Artist Series

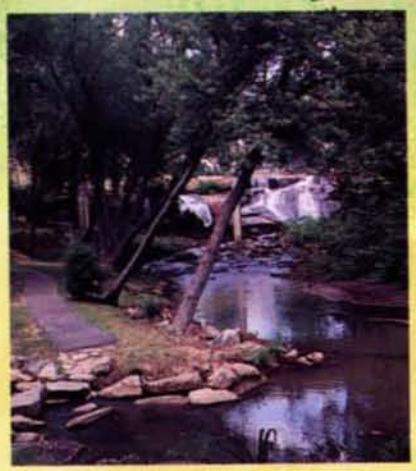
"To bring flowers or not to bring flowers—that is the question." Most major colleges and universities have some sort of concert series; BJU is no exception. Since 1934, BJU has been holding its concert, opera, and drama series, affectionately known as "Artist Series." It's all part of the founder's intent to give students a broad education that produces well-rounded Christians and graduates. From operas to orchestras, from mimes to Russian folk troupes, students have enjoyed a wide variety of guest performers. In addition, BJU's own Classic Players stage two major productions a year, usually a Shakespearean tragedy or comedy. Who knows, someday knowing who said "It's Greek to me" (Casca in "Julius Caesar") or what instrument the members of the Black Watch play (bagpipes) might just come in handy!

Exercise

Assuming you need to exercise (which all college students probably do to offset the pizza and chips), BJU offers you plenty of opportunities. Let's start with the most obvious—the Fremont Fitness Center. The Fitness Center houses men's and women's facilities with a total of 4 racquetball courts, over 60 exercise machines, tons (literally) of free weights, treadmills, stair steppers, stationary bikes, spas and saunas. The University gym, located next to the Fitness Center, encloses basketball courts and a swimming pool. You can use the 1/4 mile track for jogging, running or rollerblading, and we've got 5 outdoor basketball and 2 sand volleyball courts. If it's a workout you want, you'll have plenty of opportunities. (But between you and me, just walking to and from class is a workout in itself.)

PARTS

Greenville



We're pretty confident you'll spend every waking hour studying, but if on the rare occasion, say, once a semester, you decide to take a break, there's plenty to do in the city of Greenville. To make it simple, you can eat, shop or play. Eating? Try any of hundreds of restaurants, including (big breath here): Zaxby's, CiCi's Pizza, Ryan's Steakhouse, On the Border, Olive Garden, Outback Steakhouse, Italian Market, Macaroni Grill, Atlanta Bread Co., Don Pablos, Tony Roma's, Chili's, Jersey Mike's, plus all the usual fast food and pizza standbys. Coffee drinkers may want to visit Greenville's quaint little coffee shops such as Beano Brothers or Coffee Beanery. Shopping more your speed? Greenville has three malls, plus the Target–Wal-Mart–Kmart combination—no shortage here! And if you want to play, try making pottery at the Color Clay Cafe, playing mini-golf at Golden Park, rock climbing at the Urban Jungle, walking in one of Greenville's 39 city parks, hiking on Paris Mountain; or visit the Greenville Zoo, a Greenville Braves baseball game or a Greenville Grrrowl hockey game. Bottom line? No boredom here!

NEW International STUDIES MAJOR

Imagine yourself standing on the Great Wall of China, surrounded by Chinese-speaking people of all ages who just want to talk to you, who want to learn more, but you can't communicate, you can't say a single word in a language they will understand. You feel trapped, helpless . . .

With Bob Jones University's new international studies major, we're teaching the language, the culture, the history and the customs that will prepare students to reach the people behind the Great Wall, as well as other areas around the world. In this new program, students will be able to concentrate on a specific region of the world, such as Western Europe, Africa, Latin America, Russia, or China, with language, history, and social studies courses relevant to that culture. Graduates will be ready to head overseas as missionaries, business people, or tentmakers.

Why International Studies?

The driving forces behind the new major were all those who expressed an interest in a such a program, coupled with the vast opportunities available, especially in China.

"China has 2.5 billion people, many of whom are intensely interested in capitalism," said Dr. Bob Taylor, dean of the College of Arts and Science. "Those who understand the culture and language can do missionary work themselves, perhaps through a business endeavor or a teaching English opportunity." With most of the world already open to the gospel, BJU wants to prepare students for those opportunities; however, we have a specific burden for China. This major has been created to prepare students for missionary work when the country opens to the Gospel. In the meantime, the opportunity to share the gospel with the Chinese through business and other secular avenues is the best window.

The Opportunities

Students will be introduced to international careers in missionary service, public service, diplomacy, business, media, and economic development. Students will also have opportunities for summer study in the selected region of the world. This major will also provide excellent preparation for seminary and graduate study in the social sciences, as well as in professions such as law, business, journalism, and international affairs.

"We'll provide opportunities for students to go to that area of the world and experience the culture," Dr. Taylor says. "We hope that all of our students in this major will be able to take at least one summer study tour or participate in a summer mission team to the region of the world in their concentration." Mission teams and study tours will also count for academic credit.

The Details

"The major itself consists of a combination of history courses and social studies courses," Dr. Taylor says. "However, there are also twelve hours of business, mainly international business, and two years of language." International business or a language is recommended as a minor. Students concentrating on Europe could minor in French, for example; and beginning in 2001, students can also minor in Chinese.
